future generations to preserve the ocean and become future leaders in conservation.

Education:

Ocean First Institute focuses on youth experiential learning and education because Ocean First Institute recognizes that young people are our future. Ocean First Institute's core mission is to impart knowledge and provide experiences for youth to engage in meaningful marine science. Ocean First Institute accomplishes this through our local hands-on programming, international virtual outreach, as well as youth expeditions. Ocean First Institutes programs are built around students working alongside passionate marine scientists and educators in both the classroom and the field.

Research:

Ocean First Institutes research projects are broad and diverse and have focused on fundamental questions about the natural world and the intricacies of how species interact with their environment. Ocean First Institute goal is conservation and we predominately study sharks and their close relatives, the skates and rays, many of which are endangered. We partner with universities and institutions to conduct field-based research and engage in conservation projects that focus on imperiled species and ecosystems. Ocean First Institute strategic partnerships have allowed us to promote local and regional conservation initiatives and to have meaningful and measurable impacts.
